Update: Morocco is out of print at the moment but there is a brand new edition coming from Scrambler Books in 2013, which will include some new material and a foreword by Michael Kimball. We have a few copies of the first printing left, so if you'd like one now, please write me at matthewsavoca@gmail.com. I can send you a copy while they last or I can just read you the book over the phone.

From the Publisher: Here is a book, a low-slung bulb lighting a tall dark room, a book big enough to question and small enough to love. Written in treaty by Matthew Savoca and Kendra Grant Malone, here is a book of time and together and lonely and wanting. Knife-words edges out, lines bursting and splitting the table long, get to know Morocco. It already knows you. These poems are naked and bright, speaking from a tall dark room to all the spaces in between. A love poem, yes. A camera readied, yes. Pictures worth a thousand words ground down to dust, Morocco comes together now.
