A mysterious broadcast. A global countdown timer. Twelve hours later, electronics stopped working. A few days later, the dead started walking. At least, that's what everyone tells Simon Finch. The last thing he remembers is diving into the lake on a summer morning. When he surfaces, the world feels different. His family is missing. Along with two years of time. The skies are dark and his only clue is a stream of smoke billowing on the horizon. Now, Simon is on a mission to find his family and find answers, but the world's not what it used to be. Small settlements have formed in humanity's downfall and Simon must navigate from camp to camp, following the trail his family left behind. He knows to fear the dead, but in a world so dangerous, can he trust the living?
